11. Ufford Place gates

Gates were probably first erected here around 1850 by Francis Capper Brooke, who owned Ufford Place during the latter half of the C19th.

The gates with their brick piers are some of the last remaining features of the lost house of Ufford Place which was demolished in 1957. The Orangery, which was attached to the house, is still there as are some of the formal garden walls and yew hedges. As you walk up the footpath from the gates, you can see The Orangery on the left hand side.

The original gates were at the rear entrance to Ufford Place, the front entrance being where Ufford Park Hotel and Golf Course is today. You can still see the old gatehouse on the left as you drive into the hotel entrance.

Ufford Parish Council refurbished the gates in 2006.
